State Sen. candidate Chris Williams, arrested once again Wednesday morning, is accused of asking four individuals to say they lived somewhere they didn't. The four reportedly changed their voter registration in order to become eligible to vote in the Feb. 10 election for state senate in which Williams is a candidate.

Williams was charged with four counts of filing false public records - one is an attempted charge - and four counts of issuing worthless checks. Williams, a bail bondsman by trade, remained in jail Wednesday night on a total bond of $24,000. Filing false public records is a felony that carries with it a sentence of up to five years in jail and a $5,000 fine.
